Prof. William B. Harvey, now at the University of Michigan, and who will become Dean of the I.U. School of Law Aug. 1, spoke Saturday at the I.U. Law Day program.

His speech stressed the responsibilities of the individual in today's society. Among the points he made were warnings against shirking moral responsibility for the moral content of the law, and depending unduly on official agencies to carry out the individual's obligations.

as members of the upper 10 per cent of the graduating class: William Welborn, Evansville; Huston; John de Boisblanc, Lafayette, La.; and Arthur Fell, Bloomington.

Pratter awarded Gavel.

At the Law Day banquet, designed to honor student and faculty accomplishments, Harry Pratter, Professor of law, received the Gavel Award as the faculty member making the greatest contribution to the I.U. Law School during the current school year.

Prof. Pratter joined the I.U. law faculty in 1950 as assistant professor; was advanced to associate professor in 1957, and was given a full professorship in 1965. A graduate of the University of Buffalo and the University of Chicago Law School, he previously taught at Buffalo.

Law students honored.

Awards were also presented to these Bloomington Division students:

Tracy E. Little, Bedford, the Student Bar Association President's Award as the outstanding senior contributor to the Association and the Law School over the three years of law study; William D. Bontrager, Elkhart, Law Wives Scholarship Improvement Award; Tom Huston, Logansport, Phi Delta Phi Outstanding Senior Award.

In addition, four students were tapped for the Order of the Coif,
