Kadeer, a nominee for the 2006 Nobel Peace Prize, was imprisoned for more than five years in China on charges of providing state secrets to foreigners. Using her own resources, Kadeer founded, and then directed, a large trading company in Northwestern China that provided training and employment for Uyghurs. Prior to her arrest in 1999, while en route to a meeting with a visiting U.S. congressman, Kadeer was a member of the top advisory body to China's parliament. She is the winner of the 2004 Rafto Prize, and the current
