Michigan Man Named Dean Of Law School

Indiana University today named as new dean of the School of Law a legal scholar who once was expelled from Ghana by leftist Premier Kwame Nkrumah.

He is William B. Harvey, 43, since 1951 of the University of Michigan Law School faculty. He achieved a full professorship at the age of 34 and is co-author of a widely used casebook on contracts.

The appointment by the I.U. Board of Trustees culminates a year's search for a successor to Leon H. Wallace, dean since 1952 and builder of the Law School to ninth largest in enrollment in the country.

Wallace will continue on the faculty as holder of the Charles McGuffey Hepburn Chair in Law, created last year in memory of an earlier dean.

Harvey's contributions to professional journals have been about such varied subjects as anti-lynch legislation, criminal procedure, rights of owners of land around airports, insurance, evidence and contract problems.

Prof. Harvey will take over the deanship Aug. 1.

The African incident took place in 1964. On leave from the U. of M., Prof. Harvey had served two years as dean of law and director of legal education in the new nation of Ghana.

Nkrumah, recently deposed by his countrymen, ordered the expulsion of Prof. Harvey along with five other teachers on suspicion of subversive activity.

The dean-elect is a native of Greenville, S.C. He was graduated in 1943 with a B.A. degree in English from Wake Forest College. His plans to go on for a Ph.D. in philosophy had to be modified when he enlisted in the Navy and served as a lieutenant with the amphibious forces at Normandy and in various areas of the Pacific.

During his final year of service he was assigned as an assistant professor of naval science and tactics, first at Tufts College and then at the University of Kansas.

He entered the School of Law at Michigan and even before earning a juris doctor degree in 1949 he was a lecturer in law in the School of Business Administration.

Dean Harvey's Talk To End I.U. Law Day

Bloomington, Ind.—William B. Harvey, recently named dean of the Indiana University School of Law, will speak April 30 at a banquet ending the National Law Day program here.

The 7:30 p.m. dinner will follow a reception for the dean who will assume duties here Aug. 1.

Outstanding law students, the law professor selected by the senior class for his contributions to the Law School programs, and winners of the moot court competition, to be held earlier that day, will be honored at the banquet.
