Greetings from Bloomington

Austen L. Parrish
Indiana University Maurer School of Law

Follow this and additional works at: http://www.repository.law.indiana.edu/parrish

Part of the Legal Biography Commons, Legal Education Commons, and the Legal Profession Commons

Recommended Citation
http://www.repository.law.indiana.edu/parrish/9

This Writing by Dean Austen Parrish is brought to you for free and open access by the Law School Deans at Digital Repository @ Maurer Law. It has been accepted for inclusion in Austen Parrish (2014-) by an authorized administrator of Digital Repository @ Maurer Law. For more information, please contact wattn@indiana.edu.
Greetings from Bloomington

Spring has finally arrived here, and the campus is simply beautiful. The weather matches our mood and the bullish excitement about the school's future. While the national sentiment on lawyers and law schools seems mixed, here no doubt exists about our momentum.

In this issue of ergo, we celebrate student accomplishments and show, in a small way, the impact and difference our faculty and alumni are making in the world. Our school is a place for people who want to make a difference, who are fascinated about learning, and who know the benefits and rewards of hard work. That's so clear right now as our students dig in and gear up for the end of the semester and as we extend offers of admission to next year’s entering class.

The school continues to attract some of the most talented in the nation. Admissions for this fall's entering class (the class of 2017) are holding steady, even as the number of LSAT takers nationally has fallen by as much as 11% over last year. While we have been inoculated this year from the challenges faced by some schools, we’re not resting on our laurels. We have implemented an aggressive new admissions strategy that involves developing deep relationships with select institutions. The Rose-Hulman scholarship program (see below) is just one example of this.

We also are making gains with our unwavering commitment to ensuring our students get jobs. The last few years have been tough as the recession and changes in the large firm law market have meant that fewer entry-level positions exist. But the investment in our students and programs is paying off. We remain one of the leading examples of a school that prepares students for what law firms, corporations, and public service organizations want, by focusing on professionalism and hands-on learning. It begins in the first year with our nationally recognized legal profession course and continues throughout the upper division in our projects, externships, and clinical programs.

April 2014

Nominations open for Distinguished Service Award

Nominations are being accepted for the Law School's Distinguished Service Award, which recognizes alumni who have distinguished themselves in service to their communities or the law school in ways that exceed expectations in their normal business, professional, or civic duties. Nominations are open until April 25 and may be submitted here.

Protective Order Project to celebrate 25 years with CLE program

On Friday, Apr. 25 at 3:00 p.m., the Law School’s Protective Order Project will celebrate its 25th anniversary of serving clients seeking relief from family violence and sexual assault. Plan to join past and current POP volunteers as they recognize the work of students, alumni, community volunteers, and partners over the past quarter-century.

A special seminar, "Indiana Law Responds to Relationship Violence and Sexual Assault: The Past, Present, and Future," will be presented at 3:00 in the Law School's Moot Court Room, followed by a reception at 5:00 p.m. Indiana continuing legal education credit is pending.

RSVP to ppp25th@gmail.com. For more information, visit POP's website:
This year, we increased the nine-month employment number in the all-important U.S. News and World Report categories by almost 15 percentage points over the class of 2012. We have more to do, but we're moving quickly in the right direction.

In this issue, you'll also get a taste for how our faculty contribute to a first-rate learning environment. We've long been able to boast having some of the most talented professors in the nation -- they are skilled educators and eminent scholars who make a difference in the classroom by drawing on their passion for teaching and the insights gained from their research. Our faculty's work keeps us connected to novel issues of legal practice. Their books and articles influence the laws legislatures write, the decisions judges make, and the way law schools teach students. You can read below about five of our faculty who have excelled in the classroom and see what our faculty are working on in the Faculty News section.

Lastly, I wanted to thank you. I am grateful for your generosity and your support. Your gifts to the Fund for Excellence, our unrestricted annual fund, are at $882,000. You will be hearing from your class agent as we move into the home stretch of the fund's annual goal of $1.1 million by June 30. Your support is essential because it enables us to reduce the cost of education. This year, only because of alumni support, were we able to provide a median scholarship grant of $20,000 to 91% of our students. These opportunities allow our graduates to do great things. The four distinguished alumni whom we profile below, the most recent inductees into the school's Academy of Law Alumni Fellows, are the best illustration of that.

Since I arrived at the university in January, I have been given such a warm welcome. I have had the privilege of visiting with many of you at receptions and in individual meetings in Chicago, Florida, Indianapolis, New York, Washington, DC, and of course here in Bloomington. I have met with more than 300 alumni in receptions and more than 100 of you personally. The future of the school is tied closely to our alumni, and I look forward to meeting more of you in the months ahead.

Austen L. Parrish
Dean and James H. Rudy Professor of Law

Academy of Law Alumni fellows inducted

Four distinguished alumni were named to the Academy of Law Alumni Fellows on April 11.

This year's laureates are:

- Lowell E. Baier, LLB'64, entrepreneur, conservationist, and president, founder, and owner