Spotlight on the Law School Community

DOROTHY (DODIE) BOWMAN: FULFILLING THE LAW SCHOOL'S MISSION

Staff members like Dorothy Bowman provide the support that allows our faculty to excel in scholarship and teaching. As a senior faculty secretary, she manages the academic affairs of 4 full-time faculty, 7 adjuncts and 2 lecturers. This involves overseeing the preparation of manuscripts, court documents, correspondence, course materials, as well as travel and meeting arrangements.

When people call the law school, Mrs. Bowman is one of the first people they encounter. As the person who answers the law school's Information Line, she greets numerous callers throughout the day, directing their inquiries to the appropriate person or office.

In addition, she plays an integral role in coordinating the Trial Process Program. Mrs. Bowman created the original mailing list of trial lawyers and judges who critique students' trial performances. The list now contains 1500 participating lawyers and judges. During the Trial Process Program, Mrs. Bowman corresponds with 50-60 of these participants. Students who have benefitted from the program can thank Mrs. Bowman for her help in making it run efficiently.

While Mrs. Bowman prepares manuscripts, directs phone queries and works with Trial Process participants, she still manages to maintain her sense of style and humor.
Humor and verve characterize Dodie (the name she goes by), a person who loves romantic movies, soft music and as her twenty years here have shown working at the law school.

News from Faculty

Professor David Fidler was recently involved in an effort to enforce international health law through electronic mail technology. In early January, the European Community imposed an import ban on fresh fish originating in East Africa because East African countries were suffering outbreaks of cholera. A fish merchant posted an e-mail stating that this ban would cause thousands of job losses in East Africa. The merchant posted the message on ProMED-mail, a global electronic mail conference that serves as an early warning system for infectious disease outbreaks. Professor Fidler then posted an analysis of the EC import ban under the International Health Regulations and the World Trade Organization's Agreement on the Application of Sanitary and Phytosanitary Measures and argued that the EC ban was a violation of both international legal agreements. An official in DGV at the EC in Brussels then used ProMED mail to post a response to Professor Fidler's arguments. Professor Fidler posted a counter-response, again arguing that the EC was in violation of international law under the IHR and WTO rules. After this exchange, the EC dropped its import ban on fresh fish from East Africa. Individuals who work with ProMED-mail believe that the exchange on ProMED-mail played a role in the EC's policy change.

Professor Cate's book, Privacy in the Information Age, received an Honorable Mention as the Association of American Publishers Best New Professional/Scholarly Book in Law.

Again, forms are available in both offices. Private loan applications for amounts in excess of $18,500 are not yet available. You will receive notice when they are. See Dean Fromm if you have any questions.

NO SMOKING / SMOKING POLICY CHANGE

A few years ago Indiana University enacted a policy prohibiting smoking in university buildings. Since that time people have had to go outside to smoke. Although this solved many problems within university buildings, it has created some additional problems at the law school.

Smoking outside the law school student lounge entrance is one of the problem areas. There is a large intake vent in the covered area outside the student lounge. When people smoke in this area, the smoke is drawn into the building and creates a significant problem in parts of the law library and law school. Accordingly, smoking is prohibited in the covered area outside the student lounge. This has not solved the problem satisfactorily because the intake fans still draw smoke from outside the covered area. University officials indicate that moving or adjusting the intake fan and vent is not a viable solution.

The second problem area is in front of the law school building. Many complaints have been received by SLA (Student Law Association) members and others about people smoking in this area. The strong odor and smoke from cigarettes and cigars are very unpleasant for those entering and leaving the building. Also, cigarette butts that are left all over the ground create an unsightly appearance.

In response to these problems, smoking will now be limited to the patio area on the southeast side of the law school, accessed by the door across from the main entrance to the library and adjacent to the central stairwell door. No smoking will be allowed at the main entrance to the law school or anywhere in the vicinity of the student lounge north entrance (including the area immediately outside of the covered portion of the entrance). We appreciate your cooperation with enforcing this policy. If you have any questions, please see Dean Fromm or your SLA representative. Thank you.

JUDICIAL CLERKSHIP MAIL MERGE

If you are in the process of sending judicial clerkship applications please take note. The disk you provide the faculty secretaries for the purpose of recommendation letters must be formatted with two fields only, the name and address of the judge as the first field and the salutation as the second. The disk of the Federal Judiciary that was available in the Computer Lab was a commercially available disk which was not formatted for the purpose of sending faculty recommendation letters. The information on this disk can be utilized, but must be formatted properly and include the proper salutation (e.g., Dear Judge. . ., Dear Justice. . ., Dear Chief Justice. . .). If you have any questions regarding the formatting of your merge mail and proper salutations, please see either Kathleen or Christine.

Letter to the Editor

Letter to the Editor:
I must express deep concern and anxiety about the "Kiss the Pig" contest currently all the rage at the law school. My angst does not stem from any concern that the pig in question has not consented to its exploitation in a public display of affection, but from a deeper fear concerning the possibility of this innocent porcine-human smooch triggering a global pandemic of infectious disease. Swine are notorious carriers of the influenza virus, and scientific researchers recently discovered that a pig retrovirus can infect human cells. Retroviruses are bad boys in the microbial world (e.g., HIV is a retrovirus) because they are so sneaky in how they infect humans. In this case, a kiss is not just a kiss but a potential invitation to the fourth horseman of the apocalypse. I implore the law school leadership to call a halt to this contest in the name of world health and allow the little piggie to proceed safely and anonymously into the freezer section of the local supermarket. If the smooch must go on, then I implore the chosen faculty member to engage in safe and protected intimate contact with the pig. While such precautions may detract from the pleasure of the event, they may save Bloomington from being the epicenter of a global pandemic of porcine smooch syndrome.

Notes from Tokyo

Joe Hoffmann
I hope that all of you had an enjoyable holiday season, and have now settled into a happy and productive new year!

Here in Tokyo, yesterday was celebrated as the first official day of spring, according to the old lunar calendar that was used in Japan prior to the Meiji Era (i.e., before the 1860's). Somehow, though, it's hard to believe that spring has actually arrived -- the cold and damp winter weather, combined with the notorious absence of insulation or central heating in Japanese homes and apartment buildings, still has me shivering and huddling under blankets to keep warm! On the other hand, I saw my first plum blossoms in a park just outside of Tokyo last weekend, so maybe winter won't last much longer after all...

Meanwhile, the countdown to the Winter Olympics in Nagano, Japan, has reached its last few days. The eyes of the world will soon be upon the city of Nagano, which is about eighty minutes by Shinkansen (bullet train) from Tokyo, along with several nearby smaller towns and villages where Olympic events will also be held. The so-called "Japan Alps" are truly beautiful, especially when blanketed by winter snow, and it should be a great couple of weeks -- everyone in Japan seems to be getting excited about the Olympics! As for me, I'll be traveling (along with my family) to Nagano on February 12 and 13 (that will be the evenings of February 11 and 12, Bloomington time) to watch women's ice hockey (U.S. versus Japan), Nordic combined skiing, and women's 500-meter speed skating. Watch for me on the TV -- I'll be wearing a garish, bright-orange-and-black ski jacket!

On to more serious matters... While the U.S. media seems to have become almost totally fixated on the President's sex life (a subject that doesn't really interest the people here at all!), the news in Japan is all about the continuing series of scandals that has rocked the government and many major corporations. To put it mildly, Japan's white-collar-crime prosecutors have much more work than they can handle right now! The sokaiya (or corporate racketeer) investigations, about which I wrote last fall, have recently hit a number of new companies -- including Mitsubishi Electric, which only yesterday publicly admitted that it had been paying megabucks to the extortioners for years.

Even more troubling, however, is the fact that the vaunted Ministry of Finance (sometimes called the "Ministry of Ministries" -- high praise, in a society where the ministries virtually run the show) has been brought to its knees by scandal. In the past week, several top MOF officials have been arrested and charged with accepting bribes in exchange for revealing the dates and contents of supposedly secret investigations to the very financial institutions that were being investigated. In some cases, the MOF officials actually advised such firms on how to hide their financial losses so that the losses wouldn't show up in the firms' official balance sheets. In the wake of the scandal, the Minister of Finance and several of his top deputees have resigned, and one official even committed suicide (just up the road from my apartment building).

All of this has distracted attention from the "real" problem for the MOF, which is how to stimulate the Japanese domestic economy and thereby provide a needed financial boost for all of East Asia. If Japan doesn't shake off its current economic stagnation soon, there simply won't be enough customers in the world to buy the products of countries like South Korea, Thailand, and Indonesia, which are trying to recover from their devastating currency devaluations by increasing their exports. (The only other country that could absorb such increased East Asian production is the U.S. -- but that seems unlikely, given America's current protectionist political climate.) East Asia's smaller economies desperately need someone to buy their (suddenly much cheaper) products -- but, right now, Japan can't oblige, because it has so many of its own financial problems.

Incidentally, the public perception here in Japan is that the U.S. is altogether too cocky about its own healthy financial situation these days -- most Japanese people don't see the current East Asian financial crisis as any kind of indication that the "American way" is superior, and they certainly don't like to hear American critics and commentators suggesting such things. I can only imagine how such comments are being taken in places like Seoul, Bangkok, and especially Kuala Lumpur (where the Malaysian Prime Minister just loves to fan the flames of anti-American sentiment).

Speaking of other places in East Asia, I'm looking forward to making a couple of short trips outside of Japan next month -- to Hong Kong, where I'll be visiting one of our alums who's now teaching at the University of Hong Kong, and to Bangkok, where I'll be stopping in at two of the Thai universities that produce many of our best international graduate students, Thammasat University and Chulalongkorn University. More about those places in later installments...

Last week, I made a whirlwind speaking tour of Japan, almost from one end to the other. With the sponsorship of the U.S. Embassy, I delivered lectures about American federalism in Sapporo (far north), Osaka (middle), and Okinawa (far south/west), all in the space of about ten days. Not enough to induce jet lag, but certainly enough to keep me pretty busy!

In snowy Sapporo, I spent some quality time with Andrew Pardieck, a recent IU law graduate who's now studying for a Ph.D. in law at Hokkaido University, one of the top five law schools in Japan. Andrew is doing extremely well at Hokudai -- so much so that the faculty there actually offered him a position as a (temporary) visiting professor. For the moment, however, Andrew is content to remain a mere graduate student, and keep plugging away at his already book-length dissertation on alternative dispute resolution (in Japanese, of course). By the way, Andrew asked me to send his best to all of his friends back in Bloomington...

And, in sunny and warm Okinawa, I encountered -- to my great surprise -- a gentleman who was one of the very first international graduate students at the IU Law School, back in the early 1950's. Today, Akira Sakima is one of the most influential business leaders in Okinawa -- he's presently Chair of the local Chamber of Commerce -- but we spent most of our traditional Okinawan dinner together reminiscing about IU basketball (he arrived at IU Law School the same year that Don Schlundt led the Hoosiers to the NCAA title). Small world...

Well, it's time to wrap up this lengthy missive. Until next time, enjoy the winter weather, and root for those Hoosiers as they try to get ready for the inaugural Big Ten Basketball Tournament (yuck!).
