Lighting the way for others to give
In this issue of ergo, we celebrate the generosity of those who have made Indiana Law one of the nation’s top-flight law schools. Whether making a major, transformative gift or just meeting a student to discuss career options over coffee, your contributions have been—and will continue to be—absolutely crucial to our success.

Last year, we set records. Your gifts to the Fund for Excellence, our unrestricted annual fund, totaled just under $1.2 million—a four percent increase over last year and a 23 percent increase since 2010. The Leonard D. Fromm Memorial Fund, established in 2013 in honor of our longtime dean of students and alumni affairs, has raised more than $400,000 in gifts and pledges, including $19,575 from the class of 2014. Almost 1,400 of you volunteered your time to recruitment, career advising and on-campus activities, including 250 of you who offered to serve as mentors to existing students in our new mentoring program. Hundreds of alumni are involved with our Alumni Board, our Board of Visitors and new Young Alumni Steering Committee.

As impressive as these numbers are, the impact of our alumni engagement tells the more interesting story. Your support of the school allows us to provide exceptional and distinctive educational experiences. As a result of your generosity, our students start making an impact while they are here—setting them on a lifelong path of service as prepared professionals.

The numbers are striking. Through our seven clinics, six projects and our centers of excellence, our students, each year, help thousands of families and individuals live better lives, while spurring economic prosperity and growth. Every year, students in our VITA program help more than 500 Monroe County residents complete their income tax returns. In 2013, students in our Disability Law Clinic helped 30 clients with disability claims. Students in our Emore Entrepreneurship Clinic have helped new ventures get started as full-fledged, legally established entities ready to do business. And students involved with our new Intellectual Property Clinic also help start-ups, providing critical pro bono patent and trademark advice. Over the past several years, more than 8,000 acres of Indiana land have been protected through student work with conservation organizations. Increasingly practitioners, policy makers and other leaders in law, business and public service turn to law schools for guidance and insight. Many more students work collaboratively and under the tutelage of our faculty on projects that provide this guidance and insight. In the summer of 2014 alone, our students volunteered nearly 12,000 hours to a variety of pro bono causes.

But our impact is not just at home. Through our Center on Constitutional Democracy, dozens of students get real-world experience working on constitutional and legal reform projects in post-conflict countries. And since 2010, more than 60 students have spent the summer in seven foreign countries working as externs in law firms, nonprofit organizations or corporations, on projects as wide-ranging as tax research to advocacy for the most oppressed lower-caste communities in India. The impact continues after law school. Through alumni generosity, we now fund over 40 students in bridge-to-practice fellowships that provide our graduates employment from the time they take their bar exam to the time they receive bar exam results. Stories like these—and we can tell many others—are the true measure of your financial support.

When I joined the school as dean in January, I said that there was something different and special about the Maurer School of Law. Since then I have visited over 1,000 alumni in eight states and on three continents, and my initial impressions have been confirmed many times over. We continue to attract some of the best and brightest students from around the world. They do great things while in law school, and they go on to do great things after their time here ends. A large reason for that is your generosity. Your support of our school is remarkable. All of us are grateful for it.

Sincerely,

Austen L. Parrish > Dean and James H. Rudy Professor of Law
alumni generosity sets the bar for others’ support

Indiana Law alumni have always been generous to the school. Several sizable gifts in 2014 will have a direct impact on students while they are here — and help prepare them for a life of professional service to others. The generosity of our alumni is important for another reason: It serves as a call to action to others to contribute their own financial support to the Law School, its programs and its students. Here are the stories of these recent gifts and their longstanding impact. — The editors

Alex Robbins grew up just a short trip down Ind. 37 from Bloomington. The small town of Bedford is known for its immense limestone repositories; much of the new Yankee Stadium in New York is crafted with the Indiana stone. When it came time to decide where he was going to make a lasting impact, however, Robbins looked not to Chicago, Ann Arbor or New York, but rather to the school seemingly in his own backyard: the Maurer School of Law.

“I didn’t choose IU as an undergrad,” Robbins said (he graduated from Wabash College), “but Bloomington seemed like a natural destination for law school. The things I knew about IU from growing up in the area — the traditions, the culture — had me interested from the start. And after some conversations with Greg Castanias, JD’90, an alumnus of both Maurer and Wabash, it was clear that the Maurer School of Law was the perfect community, the perfect school for me. There was nowhere else I wanted to be.”

Like Robbins, Charles Bruess grew up in the shadows of Maxwell Hall and the Old Crescent, and eventually decided the Maurer School of Law was for him, too. He graduated in 1963; his son Steven followed in his footsteps, graduating in 1989. He serves on the school’s Intellectual Property Advisory Board.

When the elder Bruess decided he wanted to give back, he harkened back to his days in southern Indiana. Earlier this year, he and wife Jean endowed a $50,000 scholarship in their name. And while they could have earmarked the gift for anything, they wanted to ensure they did all they could for local... students who dreamt of going to law school. As such, preference is now given to applicants who graduated from public high school in the counties that surround IU: Monroe, Owen, Morgan, Greene, Brown and Lawrence.

As the first recipient of a Bruess Scholarship, Robbins was overwhelmed by the generosity.

“It’s an honor anytime you receive a scholarship award, but to receive a scholarship endowed by an alumnus and his wife is even more special,” he said. “They endow these scholarships because of the way the Law School changed their lives for the better, and it is the best way for them to give back and help affect change in the lives of current students. Graduating from Wabash, I will have significant loans to pay off after law school, and this scholarship will have a tremendous impact when it comes time to begin repaying debt. The Bruesses’ gift will go a long way in relieving some of it and making it easier to begin life after law school.”

The Bruesses’ gift is just one of a handful of recent donations that are making an impact on Maurer students, faculty and alumni. From a 2L like Robbins to recent graduates Kelsie Ackman and Travis Mellish, both JD’14, the generosity of an anonymous member of the class of 1961 is making a difference.

Both Ackman and Mellish are currently part of the Bridge-to-Practice program, which provides fellowships to recent graduates who secure unpaid volunteer positions with public interest organizations or small firms while continuing their job search after graduation. In a legal market that has not been particularly kind in recent years, Bridge-to-Practice allows graduates to focus on gaining valuable experience — not to mention performing valuable community service — while looking for permanent placement.

“It really helps get our name and face out there,” said Ackman, whose academic coursework was so impressive that she bypassed the LSAT and enrolled straight into the Law School as part of its Direct Admit program.

Now volunteering as a legal intern in Tampa, Fla., Ackman is learning from a seasoned veteran. Mellish, too, is in Florida, serving as assistant state attorney in the Office of the State Attorney for the 9th Judicial Circuit.

“I had always wanted to move to Florida after graduation, and this scholarship has allowed me to come here and pursue my career interests in the state I wanted to live in,” Ackman said. “I had never been here, and had zero contacts in the area, so I was able to get ajumpstart on my life through the Bridge-to-Practice program.”

The Scolnik Chair is the first endowed chair for a clinical law professor in the history of Indiana University, making it a truly remarkable gift. Established in 2005, the Conservation Law Center provides legal counsel without charge to conservation organizations, works to improve conservation law and policy, and offers law students clinical experience in the practice of conservation law and the profession’s public service tradition.

Furthermore, the center — just as all Maurer centers and clinical opportunities — allows them to explore different areas of law and develop passions that will have lifelong effects on society. The Scolnik Chair will provide — for years to come — a premier opportunity for those students interested in public service to the environment.

“The center not only provides our students a tremendous close-up view of what it’s like to practice law, but also shows how public service is an important part of a professional career,” said Dean Parrish. “The Scolnik Chair will be instrumental in allowing the Conservation Law Center to continue this important work.”
For students currently in law school, the Bernard Harrold Endowed Scholarship provides full tuition to a 3L from Indiana who is in the top quarter of his or her class and has demonstrated financial need. Kathleen Harrold endowed the scholarship in her late husband’s name earlier this year, supplementing a previously awarded $300,000 gift that will be used for annual scholarship awards until the funds are depleted.

Bernard “Bernie” Harrold, LLB’51, was a founding partner of the Chicago firm Milman, Harrold, Allen & Dixon (now Edwards Wildman Palmer LLP); a World War II veteran; and mentor to countless young attorneys throughout his distinguished career.

To Cathleen Wyatt, JD’15, recipient of the inaugural Harrold Scholarship, the gift represents the spirit of Maurer generosity and has already inspired her to think about giving back later in her career.

“I want to do as well as I can in my classes in order to honor the legacy of Mr. and Mrs. Harrold and others who contributed to funding this scholarship,” she said. “Financially it is a huge relief to know that the debt burden I will have upon graduation from financing law school will be much less than I had anticipated.”

Wyatt will join the Indianapolis office of Frost Brown Todd after graduating this coming spring, and hopes to work in their business group focusing on general business, banking and bankruptcy.

She said she couldn’t believe it when she learned she’d been awarded the scholarship.

“I had to read the email two or three times before I could really take it all in,” she said. “Receiving this honor has inspired me to want to give back as much as I can to the Law School in the future to help other students in their quest to become a lawyer.”

Other students with financial assistance needs can now apply for the Pat Baude Scholarship, funded by an anonymous donor who was incredibly inspired by the late professor’s impact on students.

Baude, who taught at the Maurer School of Law from August 1968 until his death in January 2011, had an influence on students, faculty and staff that spread far beyond the bounds of his classroom walls. This new scholarship has yet to be awarded, but will inspire the next generation of law students to follow in Baude’s footsteps.

These recent gifts continue an already outstanding tradition of Maurer alumni and friends giving back to the school. More than 90 percent of Maurer students receive scholarships, with an average annual grant of nearly $25,000.

“We are honored and delighted by these generous gifts,” Parrish said. “Gifts like these — from Mrs. Harrold, the Scolniks, and the Bruess family — help us make an outstanding legal education affordable to our students, and we are deeply grateful.

“As a result of this recent alumni generosity, the cost of attending the Law School has been reduced. The amount of debt for the class of 2014 was almost 14 percent below that of the class of 2013, and we hope to see that trend continue this year and next. As these stories indicate, our alumni can make a tremendous impact on current students, faculty and even recent graduates. We could not be more proud of our current and future alumni for their continued support of our school.”
runners, walkers honor len fromm at hoosiers outrun cancer

As more than 5,100 runners and walkers crossed the starting line of the annual Hoosiers Outrun Cancer event Sept. 20, more than a few were carrying the spirit of Dean Len Fromm.

Fromm, who passed away after a courageous battle with the multiple myeloma in February 2013, had his name embroidered on visors (in maroon, the official multiple myeloma awareness color) and written on the backs of team members competing in the annual fundraiser event. The race began and ended at Memorial Stadium, where Team Fromm members carried signs that read “Dean Fromm Was Our Homeboy.”

Hoosiers Outrun Cancer is now in its 15th year, raising nearly $200,000 annually for the IU Health Olcott Center. This year, several family, faculty and staff members participated in the event in Fromm’s memory.

Donna Wilber, Fromm’s widow, was the top fundraiser for the entire event. She was honored after the race for her impressive efforts.

“To the Law School, friends, family and acquaintances: We were able to raise $4,175 for Hoosiers Outrun Cancer,” Wilber said. “You are the best and I cannot tell you how much I appreciate the love and support you showed for her impressive efforts.

Fromm’s son, Erik, was the top finisher from Team Fromm, completing the 3.5-mile course in 25:15.

fromm fund surpasses $400,000

Though this February will mark the second anniversary of his passing, the memory of Leonard D. “Len” Fromm lives on in the countless number of students, alumni, faculty and staff who knew him as a kind, smart and compassionate leader.

Those whose lives he affected have shown how much he meant to them through letters, emails and testimonials to the Law School. They’ve also made a commitment to honor Fromm’s life, donating more than $400,000 to the memorial fund in Fromm’s name.

Donations made to the Fromm Fund go toward fulfilling the longtime dean of students’ mission of providing what a student needs, when the student needs it, to support the student’s quest for success.

All gifts made to the fund go directly toward student-based initiatives. The following members of the class of 2014 contributed $19,420 (49% participation), a portion of which will be matched by Scott N. Flanders, JD’82.

DISTINGUISHED SERVICE AWARD NOMINATIONS OPEN

Do you know of alumni who have set themselves apart through service to their communities? Nominations are now open for the 2015 Distinguished Service Awards.

For more information, or to submit a nomination, visit law.indiana.edu/alumni/awards/dsa.
Four Indiana Law alumni were presented with the school’s Distinguished Service Award at a luncheon ceremony in the Indiana Memorial Union on October 24.

Robin K. Boles, ’79

Robin Boles has greatly distinguished herself in service to her community and adopted country of England in ways that go far beyond the traditional practice of law. While visiting clients in England and Scotland in her early career at Arthur Young, she met her future husband, a native of Glasgow, and settled in London. In 1996 she was hired by the Prince of Wales to help establish In Kind Direct, which redistributes surplus goods from manufacturers and retailers across the UK to charities working both domestically and abroad. Under Robin’s leadership, In Kind Direct has redistributed £130 million ($209 million) in goods from over 925 companies, reaching 6,600 organizations and helping millions in need. In 2011 Robin pressed the organization to expand beyond the UK to establish In Kind Direct International, which licenses knowledge and expertise to charities and organizations in other countries, including Germany, France and Singapore. In 2013 In Kind Direct was named “Fastest Growing Charity” by the Association of Chief Executives of Voluntary Organizations.

Gregory J. Jordan, ’84

Almost since the day after graduation, Greg Jordan has been an ardent and dedicated volunteer for Indiana Law and the legal profession. A member of the school’s Alumni Board since 2006 and president in 2012-13, he has worked tirelessly to advance the school’s mission and instill a sense of pride among its alumni in the Chicago area. He is a founding member of the school’s Indiana Law Society of Chicago, and organizes and supports alumni-related activities in that area of the country. For 30 years, he has counseled dozens of students on the risks and rewards of practicing in Chicago, offering candid and practical advice with a liberal dose of good humor. He is a partner in the firm of Jordan & Zito LLC in Chicago.

Christopher D. Lee, ’93

Chris Lee has brought civic engagement to a global level in Evansville, Ind., where he is a partner in Kahn, Dees, Donovan & Kahn, LLP. In 2004 he was sent to Afghanistan as part of an Indiana National Guard deployment to aid refugees in that war-torn country. While there, he founded the Afghanistan Relief Fund, which now supports three orphanages, three hospitals, several refugee camps and a school. He also met an Afghan interpreter named Ajmal (A.J.) Myachel and established a fund to help finance A.J.’s education at the University of Southern Indiana. Chris has shifted his community support to helping Evansville high school students broaden their horizons through sports, including coordinating an annual auction to raise funds to send an entire wrestling team to a large national meet in Orlando, Fla. A recipient of the Army Bronze Star, Chris is also one of the youngest attorneys to have been named an Indiana Super Lawyer.

John E. Seddelmeyer, ’74

John Seddelmeyer has been an active civic leader in Houston and Dallas, where he is retired senior counsel for legal policy at ExxonMobil Corporation. He and his wife, Sarah, developed a love of opera while living in Houston, and he later served on the board of trustees of the Houston Grand Opera and now the Dallas Opera. John has many fond memories of law school, with only one regret: He failed to take advantage of the many cultural offerings available to IU students. To make sure that Indiana Law students don’t graduate with the same regret, he has hosted an annual visit to the IU Opera with two dozen law students as his guests since 2007. The evening includes a reception at the Musical Arts Center and a backstage tour with IU Jacobs School of Music Dean Gwyn Richards. Thanks to John’s generosity, dozens of Indiana Law students have been introduced to one of Bloomington’s cultural gems.
Strong partnerships can transform a good education into a great education. That’s the guiding principle behind the Maurer School of Law’s ongoing initiative to join forces with more than a dozen of the nation’s top liberal arts and engineering schools, with the goal of attracting their best and brightest students to Indiana Law.

The program began in March, when the law school announced a partnership with Rose-Hulman Institute of Technology establishing a scholarship program for engineering students interested in studying intellectual property law (see ergo, Spring 2014). This program offers at least two Rose-Hulman graduates a scholarship amounting to 50 percent of annual tuition, along with access to a formal mentoring program and a research assistant position in the school’s Center for Intellectual Property Research. Depending on the student’s residency and other factors, the scholarship will reduce the cost of law school tuition by about $45,000 to $75,000 over three years. (Like their IP counterparts, scholars from liberal arts schools will receive a scholarship and access to a mentoring program.)

“Liberal arts graduates make great lawyers because they have mastered skills such as critical thinking, intellectual curiosity and analytical precision,” said Dean Parrish. “These skills tend to lead to success in law school. Engineering students have the background for IP law — especially patent law, where the need is strongest. We hope to attract top-flight students in both categories through this new program.”

Parrish added that the school’s admissions staff has been visiting current and prospective partner schools recently to meet with students and pre-law advisors, accompanied by faculty members and alumni. Executive associate dean Donna Nagy spoke at Vassar, her alma mater; Prof. Deborah Widiss taught a class at Wellesley; Prof. Don Knebel spoke at Dartmouth; Prof. Fred Aman lectured at Mt. Holyoke; Prof. Mark D. Janis developed a set of IP modules for Purdue; and Parrish taught a mock class at Princeton. Parrish is in similar partnership discussions with about 20 other liberal arts and engineering schools across the country.

Since its inception, the program has expanded to include nine schools across the United States:

1. Dartmouth College
2. Georgia Institute of Technology
3. Grinnell College
4. Knox College
5. Princeton University
6. Purdue University College of Engineering
7. Rose-Hulman Institute of Technology
8. Vassar College
9. Wabash College

“Back Home Again” program attracts former Indiana residents to Law School

Hoosiers will recognize “Back Home Again” as the first three words of Indiana’s unofficial state song, sung at the beginning of the Indianapolis 500 every year. At Indiana Law, this phrase has a new meaning: a scholarship that reduces tuition to in-state levels for former Hoosiers who have lost their residency status.

“At an Evansville Bar Association event last summer, I met a lawyer who grew up and spent her entire life in Indiana but moved to Illinois right after college,” Dean Parrish explained. “She lost her Indiana residency as a result, and we lost a fine student to the University of Illinois because she couldn’t afford nonresident tuition. This program is designed to attract students like her who want to come back home to go to law school.”

Parrish added that he hopes the Back Home Again program will encourage students to stay in Indiana. “Our state has many wonderful opportunities for lawyers, both as practitioners and in business and public service. This program should further strengthen students’ ties with their home state and cause them to call Indiana home for good.”

Parrish noted that given the high quality of students and undergraduate institutions in Indiana, it’s common for students to spend a few years away from home during or after college. “As one of the top public law schools in the nation, we attract students from all over the United States and the world who understand the advantages of an IU education. As the state’s flagship law school, however, we also have an enduring commitment to educating Indiana’s best and brightest. This program is designed to advance and further a strong commitment that goes back to our founding.”
young alumni steering committee inaugurated

On Saturday, October 25, a dedicated group of alumni from across the country gathered in Bloomington to begin developing a program for young Indiana Law graduates. Focused on alumni from the past five years, the committee established two simple objectives: create pathways for students in the region or city where they choose to work and create networking opportunities for young alumni. Activities are under way in Chicago, and the committee expects to develop others in the near future.

looking back: series commemorates Brown

On May 17, 1954, the United States Supreme Court ruled that state laws establishing separate public schools for black and white students were unconstitutional, ushering a new era of equal rights into the fabric of American culture. While great progress has been made in the 60 years since the landmark decision in Brown v. Board of Education, tremendous work remains. To commemorate the 60th anniversary of the ruling and to take a critical look at the successes and failures in the decades since, the Law School hosted a semester-long speaker series, Brown at 60.

With support from the IU Office of the Vice President for Diversity, Equity, and Multicultural Affairs and assistance from the American Constitution Society, the series brought in some of the nation’s pre-eminent scholars on race in America, including Harvard Law’s Mark Tushnet, former NAACP president and Southern Poverty Law Center co-founder Julian Bond, and DePauw’s John Dittmer. Professors Kevin Brown, Luis Fuentes-Rohwer, Dawn Johnsen and Ajay Mehrotra, among others, helped organize the event.

Brown at 60 programming included:

> Mark Tushnet, Harvard Law School, “Parents Involved and the Struggle for Historical Memory,” (Jerome Hall Lecture)
> Julian Bond, chairman emeritus, NAACP, professor emeritus, University of Virginia, “The Broken Promise of Brown,” (Harris Lecture)
> John Dittmer, DePauw University, “School Desegregation in the Heart of Dixie: Mississippi Then and Now”

Expanding beyond lectures, Brown at 60 encompassed a multimedia aspect, too. Bond participated in the screening of selected excerpts from Eyes on the Prize, the critically acclaimed PBS documentary series for which he served as narrator, and IU faculty introduced the documentary American Promise. Both events were hosted in the IU Cinema, considered one of the country’s finest university theaters.

If you missed the opportunity to attend in person, the Law School has made most Brown at 60 presentations available online. Visit the school’s YouTube channel to catch up.
Indiana Law’s LGBT Advisory Board remains an integral part of the school’s community. Recent activities include instituting a mentoring program for LGBT and Maurer students; sponsoring students to participate in the Williams Institute Moot Court Competition at UCLA, the premier national moot court competition on sexual orientation and gender identity; hosting a table at the annual Lambda Legal dinner; hosting several luncheon meetings where students can discuss issues important to them with LGBT students and alumni; and providing numerous networking opportunities.

The board makes a point of seeking input from OUTlaw, the school’s LGBT student organization, and involving the students in all major decisions. “OUTlaw’s relationship with the LGBT board continues to offer professional opportunities, build interpersonal relationships, and foster a culture of inclusiveness within the law school,” says Matthew Showalter, JD’15, former president of OUTlaw. “The board members not only strive to advance our own professional careers but serve as excellent role models for the advocates we hope to become. The Alumni Board is truly a crucial part of OUTlaw and the Indiana Law community.”

At the fall meeting, the Law School’s Alumni Board unanimously passed a proposal to create three new ex officio positions to be held by the presidents of the BLSA Alumni Advisory Board, Latino Alumni Advisory Board and LGBT Alumni Advisory Board. This will create a formal link between the Alumni Board and these boards, all of which have made a significant impact through their work with students and the greater Indiana Law community.

LGBT ADVISORY BOARD

BLSA ALUMNI ADVISORY BOARD

Under the leadership of President Shakeba Dubose, JD’04, and mentoring committee chair, Tony Prather, JD’83, the board launched a mentoring program for BLSA students. The response from alumni was overwhelming, with nearly 50 alumni from across the country committing their time to mentor and counsel current students. These efforts helped inform the Career Services Office’s all-alumni mentoring program, which launched in August.

LATINO ALUMNI ADVISORY BOARD

On Sept. 6, the BLSA and Latino Alumni Advisory Boards held their annual meetings and luncheon with students. After the event, board members joined nearly 70 black and Latino alumni from across the country for a reception at the home of Professor Kevin Brown. In its eighth year, this event continues to be a highlight of the fall in Bloomington and a terrific opportunity for alumni and student interaction. Under the leadership of President Marisol Sanchez, JD’02, the Latino Advisory Board has also launched a mentoring program for LLUSA students.

Special recognition goes to the reunion leaders:
- 1959 — Dan Fetterley and Jim Fitzpatrick
- 1964 — Bob Kassing, chair; Lowell Baier, Bill Ervin, Dave Hughes, Bob Peterson, Scott Plain, Kim Rogers, Syd Steele and Bill Swift
- 1984 — Brian Shapiro, Lisa Powell and Greg Jordan
- 1989 — Mark Wright
- 2004 — Patrick McGowan
Indiana Law’s new intellectual property clinical program, a project of the Center for Intellectual Property Research, has been selected to join the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office’s Law School Clinic Certification Pilot Program.

Certification will enable students to practice patent and trademark law before the federal patent office as part of their pro bono representation of clients of the law school’s Intellectual Property Law Clinic. Fewer than 25 percent of the nation’s law schools have been selected to participate in the pilot program, and fewer still are certified in both patent and trademark law.

“We are delighted to partner with the USPTO in this important effort to provide pro bono IP services to early-stage entrepreneurs in Indiana,” said Mark D. Janis, JD’89, the Robert A. Lucas Chair of Law and director of the law school’s Center for Intellectual Property Research. “Our students will gain invaluable hands-on experience in intellectual property practice, and our clients will benefit from the technical advice they need in order to secure rights in their innovations.”

Since its formation earlier this year, the school’s Intellectual Property Law Clinic has already represented several clients on patent matters. Complemented by the general corporate counseling work of the law school’s Elmore Entrepreneurship Clinic, the intellectual property clinic expects to support innovators referred by Indiana University Research and Technology Corp., the Purdue Foundry, Rose-Hulman Ventures and the Naval Weapons Support Center Crane, among others. The clinic has received crucial seed funding from IU’s Office of the Vice Provost for Research and volunteer assistance from intellectual property attorneys at the Indianapolis office of Faegre Baker Daniels.

“Innovation is the key to economic development in Indiana,” Janis said. “Through the work of the clinics, we’re playing an active role in the economic life of the state, and we’re extremely proud of that. At the same time, we’re providing intensive practical skills training for students who aspire to practice intellectual property law.”

The Center has named two Jerome Hall postdoctoral fellows for the 2014-15 academic year.

Nate Holdren received his Ph.D. from the University of Minnesota, where he studied with Barbara Welke and Tracey Deutsch. He is particularly interested in the study of law, gender, and capitalism. His book project, Unacceptable Risks, Acceptable Losses: Workplace Injury, Law, and Employment Discrimination in the United States, 1890-1935, argues that workers’ compensation legislation benefited men more than women and led employers to practice employment discrimination against people with disabilities. Holdren has received research support from the Newberry Library, the Hagley Museum and Library, and the American Society for Legal History’s William Nelson Cromwell Foundation. He has been a fellow at the University of Wisconsin School of Law’s J. Willard Hurst Summer Institute In Legal History and the Business History Conference’s Oxford Journals Doctoral Colloquium in Business History.

Stacey Vanderhurst recently completed her Ph.D. in cultural anthropology at Brown University in Providence, R.I., where she also earned a master’s degree in anthropology and a certificate in population studies. She will use her time as a Jerome Hall Fellow to develop a book proposal and manuscript from her dissertation, Sheltered Lives: God, Sex, and Mobility in Nigeria’s Counter-Trafficking Programs. Often stopped at international border points and sent for rehabilitation against their will, many women targeted by campaigns against human trafficking do not see themselves as victims and dispute their need for intervention, while officials implicitly defend the practice as preemptive. This research uses 14 months of ethnographic fieldwork in a state-run shelter in Lagos to document ensuing debates between these women and their rescuers, ultimately framing them as a lens onto not only issues in human trafficking policy, but also the broader politics of emigration and the practices of statecraft in Africa.
Christiana Ochoa, professor of law, IU associate vice provost for faculty and academic affairs, Charles L. Whistler Faculty Fellow, and a faculty member of the Law School’s Center on the Global Legal Profession, has recently completed a documentary about the impact of gold mining on a pristine moorlands area in the highlands of Colombia. The film, Otra cosa no hay (There Is Nothing Else), was selected for screening in October at the Bogotá International Film Festival, the leading venue for independent film in Colombia. It was screened to a packed house at the IU Cinema on November 10.

The film depicts the conflict between residents of the páramo of Santurbán, for whom gold mining had been their only form of sustenance for more than 400 years, and environmental activists, who feared that proposed large-scale, multinational mining would affect the country’s drinking water supply.

Largely hidden behind the battle over the environment were longtime residents of the area, whose lives and livelihood lay in the balance regardless of which side prevailed. “It’s a complex story,” Ochoa said. “My hope is that people leave the movie with more questions than answers, and with a deep sense of the anxiety and uncertainty that has permeated the region since foreign mining interests arrived.”

Working with a crew from the Colombian film company Enlalucha Films, Ochoa made multiple trips to the Colombian highlands over four years to produce the film. “The people in those towns, what they saw coming at them were really difficult choices,” Ochoa said. “Watching how the communities related to those devastating prospects and the lack of traction they had in the political and legal system ended up being what the film is about.”

For better or for worse, a regional park has been created in the area, and large numbers of formerly employed miners have had to turn to illegal gold mining in order to get by. This has put them at odds with the government, and returned a stabilized region in Colombia to a period of insecurity and uncertainty. Ochoa, the film’s director and executive producer, received travel support from the Law School and the Center for the Study of Global Change. She self-funded the production of the film and decided early in the process it would be a non-commercial endeavor. In a media experiment, she created a website for the film — www.nothingelsefilm.com — but has chosen not to promote it yet, to observe how the webpage moves through the globe on its own, before setting out to promote it actively. As of early October, it had garnered about 4,000 page views.

moot court competition
celebrates
50th anniversary

Winners of the 50th annual Sherman Minton Moot Court Competition were selected Friday, Nov. 14 before a standing-room-only crowd in the Moot Court Room.

Four second-year students — Ian Bensberg, Morgan Davenport, Riley Floyd and Samuel Hofmeier — presented final arguments in Pataki v. Lark Valley School District Board of Education. After intense deliberation, a panel of distinguished jurists named Bensberg and Hofmeier this year’s champions.

The final round was judged by Hon. Deborah Lynch, U.S. magistrate judge for the Southern District of Indiana; retired Monroe County Circuit Judge and Sagamore of the Wabash recipient Hon. Viola J. Taliaferro, JD’77; Hon. Mary Ellen Diekhoff, JD’86, Monroe County circuit judge, presiding judge of the Monroe County Drug Treatment Court and adjunct professor in the IU Department of Criminal Justice and at the Maurer School of Law; Bryan Babb, JD’99, chair of the Appellate Services Group, Bose McKinney & Evans LLP; and Indiana Law dean and James H. Rudy Professor of Law Austen L. Parrish.

This year’s case centered on two key questions: How should public employees’ First Amendment rights to speak out on controversial issues be balanced against the interests of elected officials in implementing their policies without obstruction, and does striking prospective jurors based solely on their religious beliefs violate the U.S. Constitution’s Equal Protection Clause?

While the Sherman Minton Moot Court Competition has traditionally been split between the fall and spring semesters, this year’s event took place entirely in the fall. Participation, however, was at record levels, with 151 second-year students (more than 75 percent of the entire class) entered in the competition.

Prof. Seth Lahn, the faculty advisor to the competition, called this year’s event “one of the strongest and most competitive in recent memory. We couldn’t be more proud of the work our students put in or more appreciative of the time and resources our alumni and volunteers have dedicated to make the event possible.”

The final round can be seen on the Law School’s YouTube channel at: www.youtube.com/iuaurerlaw
dear alumni and friends:

During a recent conversation with the school’s advisory board members, the topic of our sense of pride in the Law School came up. It was clear that the phrase had a different meaning for every person in the conversation. So I decided to follow up with a very unscientific survey. I asked faculty, alumni and students the same question: “What’s your sense of pride in the Maurer School of Law?” Among the many responses, several themes emerged:

> Diploma: “I’m proud of my diploma and its reputational value reflected in rankings”
> Achievement: “I’m proud of the success and accomplishments of the Indiana Law community”
> Experience: “I’m proud of my Law School experience and how it prepared me for success”
> Relationships: “I’m proud of the lifelong personal relationships law school has engendered”
> Impact: “I’m proud of the impact I’ve made with and through the Law School”
> Legacy: “I’m proud of being part of something purposeful that will endure”

I found that some of the most passionate people I surveyed could easily move down this list and point to multiple reasons for their sense of pride. So I hope you will take stock and reflect on your sense of pride in the Law School — and consider ways you can strengthen it. Here are two notable ways:

1. Leading the way — Class of 2014. Did you know that every year 16 percent of our alumni donate to the Indiana Law annual fund? The standard of excellence for law schools is the University of Virginia, where 49 percent of alumni donate annually. We asked the Class of 2014 to meet this standard of excellence, and they responded: 49 percent participated in the 3L class campaign! What’s your class participation rate? Clearly, the Class of 2014 has good reason to be proud.

2. Sharing and celebrating successes and milestones. Staying in touch with your classmates by sharing success and milestones fosters stronger connections and helps instill a sense of pride. Consider keeping us up-to-date. Share your news with our alumni office, and they’ll make sure it’s posted on the Law School’s website and in ergo. And link in with your class agent or consider becoming one.

Strategic planning has kicked off. Dean Parrish and our faculty have launched a strategic planning process. We’re going to use the process to reaffirm what makes Indiana Law exceptional. We’re also going to establish a direction and key priorities that will be integral to the school’s enduring excellence. I’m eager to watch this process unfold and expect to be proud of the direction of the school. Getting involved and helping drive our key priorities will certainly be a source of pride for many.

There’s certainly good reason for us all to have a strong sense of pride in Indiana Law!

Sincerely,

Scott Bassett, JD’86 > Law Alumni Board President

We are pleased to recognize and thank the members of the Kimberling Society: the IU Foundation’s planned giving society, the Arbutus Society.

In November 2009, the Law School honored Jack Kimberling, JD’50, for his generosity and vision by creating the Kimberling Society: a special group of donors who have made arrangements to support the Law School in their estate planning.

Membership in the Kimberling Society is open to all who make or have made a planned or deferred gift commitment to the Law School. This is accomplished by naming the IU Maurer School of Law as a beneficiary through a bequest in a will, charitable remainder unitrust or annuity trust, pooled income fund, charitable gift annuity, life insurance, retirement plan or other life-income arrangements. Members in the Kimberling Society are automatically included in the IU Foundation’s planned giving society, the Arbutus Society.

We are pleased to recognize and thank the members of the Kimberling Society:
Hon. Lee H. Hamilton recognized with Congressional DSA

Hon. Lee H. Hamilton, JD’66, director of the Indiana University Center on Congress, received the 2014 Distinguished Service Award of the U.S. Association of Former Members of Congress at the group’s 44th annual meeting in Washington, D.C.

Hamilton represented Indiana as a Democrat in the U.S. House of Representatives from 1965 to 1999, establishing himself as a leading figure on foreign policy, intelligence and national security. His chairmanships included the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence and the Select Committee to Investigate Covert Arms Transactions with Iran. In addition, he serves Indiana University as a Professor of Practice in the School of Public and Environmental Affairs, a Distinguished Scholar in the School of Global and International Studies and co-chairman of IU’s International Engagement Advisory Board.

Hamilton writes twice-monthly commentaries about Congress and what individuals can do to make representative democracy work better. A leader in the growing national movement to expand and improve civic education, he serves as a co-chairman of the Campaign for the Civic Mission of Schools.
