Boshkoff left Wayne State University in 1962 accepting a teaching position at the I.U. law school. He has been very effective in hiring law school faculty as his first step in raising Bloomington's ranking.

The report says that the Carnegie Commission should be made aware of the third year law school curriculum and, instead of general education, focus on a specialized area of the law. The report says that 'trends will create a need for paraprofessionals and specialists in law.' It says that 'trends will create a need for paraprofessionals and specialists in law.'
