This Week in the Law School

"Dewey defeats Truman." "All Titanic passengers safe." "There will be no ILA this week."

The Court of Appeals of Indiana has issued its opinion in Handy v. PC Building Materials, the case that was argued here at the Law School last month. The Court's decision can be read online. And while ILA cannot provide legal advice, we can say that when shopping for giant slabs of granite countertop, it might be a good idea to ask for help.

If you're all about that case, 'bout that case, no gavel, then check out spring Trial Competition opportunities today at noon.

Learn how to prep for exams from two of your peers today at noon, then mark your calendars for multiple ExamSoft review sessions beginning Dec. 1.

Professor Susan H. Williams will deliver the Sonneborn Lecture
Susan H. Williams, the Walter W. Foskett Professor of Law in the Indiana University Maurer School of Law, has been named the 2014 Tracy M. Sonneborn Award, which honors an Indiana University faculty member for outstanding research and teaching. As the 2014 Sonneborn Award recipient of the Sonneborn Award, Professor Williams will give the annual Sonneborn Lecture on Monday, Dec. 1, at 4 p.m., with a reception following. Both events take place in the President's Hall, located inside Franklin Hall. The award and lecture are named for the late IU biologist Tracy M. Sonneborn, a renowned geneticist who was also highly regarded for his teaching. "Susan Williams is truly deserving of the Sonneborn Award," said provost and executive vice president Lauren Robel. "She is widely recognized for her path-breaking scholarship on constitutional theory, and she is an inspiring teacher who brings out the best in her students. Her fearless work in constitutional design has helped empower marginalized populations in some of the world's most troubled regions."

Pro Bono Opportunity

Prof. Aviva Orenstein has a pro bono trust and estates matter that needs research and drafting of letters and court papers relating to a single father who died without a will. His children (in their young 20s) need help accessing bank accounts, car title, 401K, and other property. Research is also needed about what help, if any, the state provides to indigent people regarding funeral expenses. In addition to learning a lot of practical knowledge about estate work, this research provides an excellent opportunity to help a family devastated by a sudden, tragic loss. Contact Prof. Orenstein (aorenste@indiana.edu) if interested.
