Welcome back! We hope you had a safe and relaxing winter break and look forward to an exciting spring semester. Monday is Martin Luther King Jr. Day. Indiana University offers a number of opportunities to participate. A list of events can be found online. ILA will resume its normal, beginning-of-week schedule on Tuesday, when the Law School will host two major events in the Moot Court Room.

- At 4:30 p.m., attorneys representing the family of John Crawford III — the Ohio man killed by police in a Beavercreek Walmart last summer — will talk about the case.
- At 7:30 p.m., H.E. Dr. Riyad H. Mansour, the Palestinian ambassador to the United Nations, will speak on current events in Palestine.

Look for further details of both events on Tuesday, but mark your calendars to attend both of these timely and topical talks.

While You Were Out...

Prof. Bill Henderson was named the "most influential person in legal education" by the National Jurist.

Norman J. Hedges was named director of the Law School's Intellectual Property Clinic. Welcome, Professor Hedges!

Significant refurbishments were made to classrooms 121 and 125. Sound-proofing was not one of the features added, so please attempt to contain your excitement.

We've taken the hassle out of flushing urinals by installing automatic models in many restrooms. Many sinks are now "hands-free" too, and we anticipate both developments having a solid impact on the U.S. News and World Report rankings.
Just like Peyton Manning, some things don't seem to work well in January. The elevator is one of them. It remains closed until early February, though we hope it will be ready sooner.

Faculty News

Prof. Dan Cole was invited to be a part of "The Role of Economics in Competing Conceptions of Property Law," a panel organized by the Property Law Section at the AALS meeting. Prof. Cole was invited to be a part of that panel along with Henry Smith (Harvard), Laura Underkuffler (Cornell), Eric Claeys (George Mason), and Lua Yuille (Kansas). His presentation was entitled, "Property Law without Economics is Not Property Law," and examined widely taught cases in property law that cannot be adequately understood without some understanding of basic economic concepts and principles.

Prof. Sarah Jane Hughes published an article entitled "Did the National Security Agency Destroy the Prospects for Confidentiality and Privilege When Lawyers Store Client's Files in the Cloud - and What, if Anything, Can Lawyers and Law Firms Realistically Do in Response?" in volume 41 of the Northern Kentucky Law Review, which was released this week in both print and electronic form. The article grew out of the Law + Informatics Symposium held at NKU's Salmon P. Chase School of Law in February 2014, and was informed in part by the NSA's "listening" to telephone conversations between the DC office of Mayer, Brown and an otherwise friendly foreign government client involved in trade negotiations with the US Trade Representative. On January 3, Prof. Hughes participated in a panel at the AALS meeting entitled "Regulation in the Bitcoin Era." Her portion of the panel focused on regulatory models for different aspects of possible regulation of Bitcoin activity.

Prof. Steve Sanders published an essay Jan. 3 on the Huffington Post arguing that the issue of marriage equality "is a national problem, not a state-level problem, and it requires a national resolution that only our nation's constitutional court can provide." At the annual meeting of the Association of American Law Schools, Professor Sanders organized and moderated an AALS Presidential Program on the topic "Academic Freedom for the Next 100 Years." He also became a member of the executive committee for the AALS's Family Law section.

Prof. Deb Widiss presented at AALS in the Employment Discrimination section panel on the 25th anniversary of the Americans with Disabilities Act. Her research looked at ongoing citations to Supreme Court interpretations that Congress has repudiated. Prof. Widiss also presented at AALS on the Legislation section panel about how and why to teach about legislative process in legislation and regulation courses.
